

What is claimed is:

1. A protection device connected between two lines of an AC power line, comprising:

means for introducing a simulated ground fault current between said two lines during a first polarity of said AC power; detection means for detecting said introduced ground fault during said first polarity of said AC power; and response means, responsive to said detection means, for responding to an absence of detection of said introduced ground fault.